"There goes the Lily's cowboy adorer," said an idler at the Baldwin bar, as a stout, large built man, dressed in a dark brown suit stepped briskly out of the ho-tel at 10 o'clock and got into the handsome Victoria that was waiting at the side entrance.

"He's going to take the Lily out for an airing," said another, "for that's the same team she got from the the Fashion stables yesterday, and you can bet your last nickle that the driver got orders to pick the cowboy up on his way down to Langtry's car.

The "cowboy," as he was called, lolled back in the Victoria with an air which STOCK GAMBLING BY CONGRESSsaid as plainly as words could speak, "I'm putting up for this rig and propose to enjoy it." When he was out of sight an Alta reporter, who had heard what was said, made some inquiries to find out who and what the cowboy is who has taken the place once occupied by the immortal Gebhardt. The reporter soon discovered that the cowboy has a name, though he will hereafter find but little use for it, now that his friendship for the Lily has brought him into prominence as the cowboy.'
